The School of Social and Behavioral Sciences offers course work designed to satisfy many needs. Those intending eventual careers in the discipline areas listed above will find courses suitable to the lower#division (freshman and sophomore year) preparation.

Other courses should also be integral parts of the general or liberal education of any college student. Such courses foster understanding and appreciation of our world, our social structure and institutions, and ourselves as dynamic human personalities. Finally, School of Social and Behavioral Sciences courses may provide one of life's most satisfying personal experiences, learning for the sheer joy of learning.
